DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-7 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Levin (USPN 6,144,007) in view of Takahashi et al. (USPN 5,961,857).

Levin discloses an apparatus for forming perforations using a laser. The pulsed energy beam in relation to the object is determined and a hole is formed based on the relative position. The relative position of the object to the pulsed energy beam is then changed and the determination and firing process is repeated a plurality of times for form a perforated object with a preset hole pattern. Laser head moves during the processing. A feed back sensor determines the relative position of the object relative to the beam emitter and an energy beam controller. The energy beam controller causes the energy beam emitter to emit a plurality of pulses of energy to form a plurality of perforations in the object according to the preset hole pattern based upon a feedback sensor regarding the relative position of the object relative to the energy beam emitter. The pulse controller can calculate any variance in the position of the object and/or laser head as a function of time from a predetermined schedule. In addition, the system has a CNC system and a servo loop. (abstract, figures, col. 2-6)

Levin does not specifically indicate the parameters of the relative motion.

Takahashi et al. discloses a laser machining apparatus in which the system detects changes in the machining operation. Machining conditions, feedback parameters and interpolation computing is determined in the system.

It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of the invention to use interpolation, as taught by Takahashi et al. in the Levin system because it yields greater machining precision.

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. See US PTO-892.
